Kissinger, Tho Still Deadlocked

By Jonathan C. Randal

PARIS, Dec. 10 (WP).—The peace talks between Henry A. Kissinger and Le Duc Tho have made no substantive progress since their resumption here last Monday, informed sources said today.

But neither the United States nor North Vietnam shows any sign now of wanting to break off what the sources termed "purely academic discussions" on major matters. The sources described the situation as a "war of attrition at the negotiating table instead of on the battlefield."

Despite the substantive dead-lock, experts working on separate military and political commissions are slowly tackling tech-nical problems, the sources added. Typical of such problems, the sources said, is the drawing of maps to determine the emplacement of Communist and Saigon government units after the standstill cease-fire takes effect.

Zones of Control The mapping is designed to reach agreement on the exact locations of zones under Communist or Saigon control as well as on contested areas and to prevent any troop movements after a trasted with a wave of optimism last night when, after a 3 1/2-hour negotiating session, it was announced that Mr. Kissinger's deputy, Gen. Alexander M. Haig ir, was flying back to Washington to report to President Nixon. The yery fact that both sides' experts met today while Mr. Kls-

Revised U.S. Demands On substantive problems, the sources said, nothing has chang-ed since Nov. 20. Mr. Kissinger then presented radically revised demands to North Vietnam when the talks resumed after a five-week hiatus in which Hanoi accused the United States of reneging on its earlier agreement to sign the cease-fire accord Oct, 31. Subsequently, North Vietnam has charged in essence that the United States radically rewrote the original draft accord to meet violent objections by President Nguyen Van Thien of South Viet-

Early Count Shows Tanaka Victory

TOKYO, Monday, Dec. 11 (NYT).—Voting returns early this morning indicated that Premier Kakuei Tanaka's Liberal-Democratic party would be returned to power with a solid, unspectacular victory in the nationwide election held yesterday.

Voters went to the polls to choose 491 members of the House of Representatives, the lower and more powerful chamber of the national Diet. The upper house, which has a fixed term, was last elected in 1970.

With about 60 percent of the races settled, the Liberal-Democrats had won 209 seats, more than enough to project a majority in the bouse. In addition, nine independents had been

As usual, the public announcement contained no details on aid arrangements and foreign trade exchanges. It said:

"The Soviet Union will make large-scale deliveries of goods, equipment and other property of great significance for the development of North Vietnam's economy and will give necessary assistanca in the strengthening of its defense capacity."

According to U.S. intelligence estimates, Soviet aid to North Vietnam has been running at somewhat under $500 million a year, of which more than half would be economic.

Most of the Soviet Union's deliveries of costly advanced weapons systems, such as groundto-air missiles, were made in 1966 and 1967 when the American bombing campaign got under way.

Part of the Soviet grants in aid have been designed to compensate for the highly unbalanced conventional trade with North Vistnam, Last year, the last for which figures are available, Soviet exports were 139.2 million rubles and imports from North Vietnam only 21.5 million. A ruble is worth $1,22 at the official rate of exchange.

According to Soviet foreign trade statistics, nearly one-half of civilian shipments to Hanoi in 1971 consisted of industrial equipment, such as power generators and mining machinery, as well as farm tractors and trucks. Truck deliveries have ranged between 2,000 and 3,000 a year, and some of the vehicles presumably have been used to transport supplies to forces in South Vietnem.

Astronauts Are to Stay Clo To Rover on Excursion Tod

By Stuart Auerbach

HOUSTON, Dec. 10 (WP),-Apollo-1" astronauts Eugene Cernen and Harrison (Jack) Schmitt will stick close to their lunar rover when they take their first excursion on the moon tomorrow

They will venture only a short three miles and apend most of their time within 100 yards of their lunar rover, setting up a package of experiments. All told they will spend seven hours on the moon

The first thing Mr. Schmitt and Navy Capt. Cernan will do is unfold their lunar rover from the side of the Lem. Once it is set up on all four wire wheels, Capt. Cernan will take it for a quick spin around the landing site to make sure the rover works. All this should be completed within slightly more than an hour after the Apolio-17 satro-

and businessman from Dallas. 'I am centrist, a worker, a doer, a putter-together, and those talents belong to you," he told the committee. Mr. Strauss won the chairman-ship on the first ballot against George Mitchell of Maine and Charles T. Manatt of California after Mrs. Jean Westwood, the chairman since Mr. McGovern's nomination, anounced her re-tirement. The vote on election of a new chairman was 106 1/2 for Mr. Strauss, 71 1/4 for Mr. Mit-chell and 26 for Mr. Manatt. Mrs. Westwood's resignation and Mr. Strauss's election came shortly after Mrs. Westwood defeated an effort by the Strauss forces to oust her. The vote against the motion to declare the chairmanship vacant-in effect to impeach Mrs. Westwood—was 105 to 100, an apparent setback for Mr. Strauss. Yet a number of the votes for Mrs. Westwood in that original test were conditioned on her promise to step aside yester-day in any case.

Mrs. Westwood had earlier said she would not resign until Mr. Strauss withdrew as a "symbol" of the party's divisions or alternatively unless a compromise candidate could demonstrate majority support to succeed her, But Mr. Strauss stayed in the race yesterday afternoon and none of the "unity" candidates showed any commanding strength. The decision by Lawrence F. O'Brien, former chairman, not to stand for nomination appeared to have tipped potentially crucial votes to Mr. Strauss on the first

Aid Agreement Announced As Allende Leaves Russia

MOSCOW, Dec. 10 (NYT).-The Soviet Union pledged con-tinued political and economic support for Chile today as Presi-dent Salvador Allende ended a four-day visit.

However, the pledges, made public lu a communiqué, fell short of practical eteps to assist the Chilean government in its current problem of marketing its copper in face of legal actions begun by Kennecott Copper Corp. after nationalization of its Chilean interests last year.

The U.S., based company has sought to obtain court orders in France to prevent the Sontiago government from selling copper from Kennecott's former Chilean mines. The action has put a financial squeeze on Chile, which derives three-fourths of its foreign trade earnings from copper

The Soviet-Chilean communique was issued here several hours after Mr. Allende had left Kiev by air for Havana on his way back home. He had spent 24 hours in the Ukrainian capital after talks in Moscow with the top Soviet leaders. The Chilean had arrived in the Soviet Union last Wednesday.

Besides promising continued support for Chile's domestic and foreign policies, Moscow pledged further economic ald in the construction of unspecified industrial establishments and for power plants, agriculture and fisheries. -A small plane lost for 32 days in the Arctic wilderness was found esterday with the pilot in relatively fine shape. He survived by eating lichens and dextrose and got water by eating snow. Three others aboard the plane were dead. Two were Eskimos and one a British nurse.

The survivor was Martin Hartwell, 45, a native of West Germany who has two years' experi-ence flying in northern regions. Dr. Warren Harrison of the Canadian forces said Mr. Hartwell was in "excellent condition" in a hospital. "The way he felt, he could have gone on quite a while longer."

The pilot was quoted as having said that the Eskimo boy died shortly after a plane passed almost directly overhead but did not spot them even though they had a fire burning.

Mr. Hartwell's plane had been on a medical flight between Cambridge Bay and Yellowknife. A military spokesman said the craft was found "heavily damaged" 30 miles south of Great Bear Lake. Baby Food First

Dr. Harrison said the pilot had lost much weight and was fed a first hospital meal of baby foodpureed chicken, mixed vegetables and banana custard.

"Baby food is all he'll be on for while," said the doctor, explaining that the body cannot retain much food until it recovers from a starvation diet. The doctor said Mr. Hartwell was able to keep plenty of fluid in his body by eating snow.

He also said that the pilot might have some problems with the fractures in his legs because they had started to heal in the wrong position.

100 State Dept. Aides Ready To Retire for Special Pension

By Tad Szulc

-As many as 100 senior State Department officials, including several ambassadors, are expected to retire by Jan. 31 to take advantage of a special pension increase linked to the cost of living.

In the process, officials said, the department will lose a number of "first-rate" Foreign Service officers whom it would like to keep for several more years along with those who are considered to be expendable.

"In any event, this will be quite an exodus," a department official

Under a similar procedure, applied for the first time on Nov. 30, 1971, only 40 Foreign Service of-ficers retired from the department. Retirements of civil aervice officials assigned to the State Department are counted

State Department officials con-ceded privately that the continuing low morate in the department combined with the financial incentive of a higher pension is the reason for the anticipated record number of ranking officers known to be planning to retire prematurely before the end of January. In some instances, however, senior officers here and ambassadors abroad who prepared to re-tire during 1973 for personal reasons are departing earlier because of the pension bonus.

Beam and Burbour Among those planning to retire before the cut-off date are Russell Fessenden, deputy assistant secretary of state for European affairs; Jacob D. Beam, the amsues that Moscow regards as vital, bassador to the Soviet Union; Walworth Barbour, the ambassa-Nixon administration officials dor to Israel, and Joseph Palmer, the ambassador to Libya. Giorgione Work Taken at Church In Venice Area

CASTELFRANCO VENETO, Italy, Dec. 10 (Reuters).—A price-less painting by Renaissance master Giorgione was stolen during the night from the cathedral here, police said today.

The work, known as the Castelfranco Madonna, is one of the few works by Giorgione to have survived. It was painted in 1504 and has been on view in the cathedral for simost two cen-

Police said they believed the thieves, who cut through a barred window to enter the cathedral, honed to hold the painting to ransom rather than sell it. They ignored other valuable paintings in the 18th-century cathedral and took only the Giorgione, police said.

The theft is the latest in a series in the Venice area that has involved millions of dollars worth of art works.

Giorgione (1476-1510) was a Venetian painter who was ranked with Leonardo da Vinci as one of the formative artists of the Renaissance.

Position of Power

The key to her undisputed position of power in the motion picture industry for 40 years was simple, but before she came to Hollywood, unprecedented,

She opened the doors on private lives of movie people reporting their scandals, romances, feuds and break-ups. Until her emergence on the Hollywood scene, news stories about the stars were generally confined to studio press releases.

She was both loved and feared, courted and scorued by those she wrote about, depending on whether they were in or out of favor. Many of them called her before making a step in their careers or personal lives.

by the vice-premier, Adm. Luis Carrero Blanco, denouncing those churchmen who had "forgotten what the regime of Generalissimo Francisco Franco had done? for Catholicism in Spain. At the opening of a cabinet meeting Thursday, Adm. Carrero Blanco addressed himself to Gen. Franco, who observed his 80th birthday Monday, and expressed, on behalf of all Spaniards. "our devotion, our profound gratitude and our blind faith in the decislons emanating from your acthority.

But the annual meeting of the Spanish bithops, which ended here last weekend, made it evident that a majority of the churchmen did not share this falth in the general and his gov-ernment, and wished a more independent position. A declaration on church-state relations was to have been issued but was postponed for several weeks in an attemnt to achieve unanimity,

Blocking Manenver

Adm. Carrero Blanco's pointed reminder of what the Franco government had done and is doing for the church was seen as a direct effort either to head off the declaration altogether or to soften it so much as to make it mean-

Inhibiting the bishops at the same time was the question of financing. The government is said to spend about $95 million a year to maintain the church and the clergy, and in ecclesiastical circles it is generally agreed that the church is not now prepared to sustain itself. A warning of what the government might do if a complete break came was the recent decision cutting off funds 19 seminar that they were no longer functioning as seminaries.

Nonetheless, most of the bishops are supporting a document calling for revision of the concordat, signed in 1953 between the Vatican and the Spanish government, which made the church here almost an integral part of the regime.

The concordat provides for a government say in the appointment of bishops, accords public funds to the church and gives priests a special legal status, in-cluding immunity from arrest except with the consent of their

The proposed document may call for the withdrawal of bishops from parliament, where three sit as personal representatives of Gen. Franco. The bishops had been reported to be under discree; pressure not to remove what had been, in effect, a major prop of the Franco government. Adm. Carrero Blanco's words brought the pressure into the open. He recalled what Gen, Franco had done for Snain and the church in starting. in 1936, what he called "a war of liberation" against the Second Republic, which he accused of murdering Catholic clergymen and laymen and burning churches.

The admiral asserted further that Gen. Franco had saved Spain from "atheistic Commnnism" and had "served God by serving His church" in subsequent years by spending 300 billion pesetas, the equivalent of $4.7

billion at current exchange rates, on church buildings and schools. "It is lamentable," Adm. Car-rero Blanco said, "that in the course of the years, some, who by their position should least do it, have forgotten this or do not wish to remember it."

He was believed to be reflecting official annoyance with the new liberalism of the Spanish church, stemming in part from the Vatican councils, and with its evident desire not to be identified with a particular political doctrine or

The admiral attacked liberalism, declaring that it placed individual liberty over the wellbeing and unity of the nation. He said the winners of World War II had been the Soviet Union and the Western democracies "that is to say, Communism, which emerged from the war much fortified, and liberalism, which is the political system most apt to weaken peoples."

He noted with satisfaction that in the Spanish Civil War, which ended in 1939. Communism and liberalism had been defeated, Adm. Carrero Blanco, as a result of a decree in July, will contimue in power-at least in a caretaker capacity-after Gen. Franco leaves the scene. He will promoted to premier under Prince Juan Carlos de Bourbon, who will become king, and will retain that office until the coronation, or possibly beyond,

On behalf of the commission, Mr. Mansholt urged the Council of Ministers to agree to the unions' case. "It's not so extravagant," he said after the final breakdown "The cost of living is higher in Brussels."

Mr. Mansholt said that tha council had been faced with an extremely difficult choice: to postpone a decision and persuade the unions to continue work or

WASHINGTON (NYT).—The knowledge that a cease-fire in Southeast Asia may truly be at hand has thrown the families of the 1,268 missing Americans and 554 prisoners of war onto the cruelest of roller-coasters, swooping between exhibitration and

The cry of Janis Dodge of San Diego, the wife of a Navy pilot shot down five and a half years ago, echoes their universal agony: status. 'Oh, God, just get it over with, even though I'm scared to death how it will turn out."

Interviews around the nation reveal similar feelings of heightened apprehension as the efforts to end the Vietnam war move into what appears to be a decisive

A few weeks ago, at ber home in Frederick, Md., Jo Ann Flora was remembering how it all began for her. The news was broken the way it almost always is.

Two men-a chaplain and a casualty assistance officer-came up the walk to her door. "You don't have to tell me," she said. "He's dead."

'Now wait a minute-it's not that bad," the chaplain said. "He's missing." The other day, Mrs. Flora, recalling the chaplain's remark, said, "He thought he was being kind."

Somewhere

That was five years and four months ago, and all Mrs. Flora has had to cling to since is a "broken cry for belp" heard after her wounded husband, a Green Beret sergeant, tumbled from a helicopter into the jungle "somewhere near the DMZ" in Vietnam. T loved my husband dearly.

think I still do. But how can I be sure I love a man I haven't seen or heard of for five years?" she asked. "I want it to be the way it was but I'm afraid it might not be.'

The Floras had been married less than three years when be went to Vietnam, leaving behind a 2-month-old son and a 7-yearoid stepdaughter.

The plight of Janis Dodge is more dramatic. She at least has had something more solid to cling to-a photograph that has haunted her and government officials

A striking close-up of her husband being ied through a Vietnamese street by his captors, his head bandaged, his face charged with what appears to be anger and bewilderment, was published in Paris-Match magazine in September, 1967, a few months after his plane was shot down.

She identified the picture as that of Lt. Ronald Dodge after going over the photograph "feature by feature" with friends. The Pentagon put him on POW

In Limbo

But two years ago, when Hanol released its "definitive" list of prisoners, his name was not on the rosters of those either still alive or dead after being captured in North Vietnam. Ronald Dodge is in limbo, and so is his wife.

A marine told Mrs. Dodge and other relatives at a recent briefing to prepare them for the return-or permanent disappearance -of their men: "Rest assured, we will leave no stone unturned to find them" after the war is

Her heart sank, "I got the impression at that meeting that I would be an admiral's wife before I found out if Ron's alive," she said. The absent men have been systematically promoted while missing or in captivity. Interviews here at the National League of Families of American Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia, and private talks with wives and mothers across the country, reveal a special hell not experienced in other wars.

The expected sorrow and loneliness are compounded by uncertainty and a conflict of unprecedented length, with missing and known captives dating from 1964.

Further, the families of POWs and missing servicemen have been isolated from the rest of American society because of their re-latively small numbers, and, for five years-from 1964 to 1969the absolute public silence imposed on them by the Pentagon In those years, until Sybii Stockdale of Coronado, Calif., established a private grapevine and then the league, the fam-

For many, getting together to talk about common problems and to dramatize the stories of the "forgotten" men and those waiting for them at home has been a salvation.

For there are problems-acute problems-that may continue or worsen after the men come back. The women have changed. Typically, they are tougher and more independent. They will find it hard or impossible to revert to their passive "yes, dear" roles. They have raised children by their rules alone. They bave coped with a society that avoids them or is baffled or embarrassed by their 'People want to put you in a slot," Evelyn Grubb said. "You're not a widow; you're married, not a divorcee. You don't fit in the psychology of this society."

Her husband, Wilmer Newlin (Newk) Grubb, then an Air Force captain and now a lieutenant colonel, was shot down and captured six years and 10 months ago. Photographs of him looking strappingly healthy despite his captivity were released by Hanoi through 1969.

Shored Up

Both Mrs. Grubb and Mrs. Stockdale are shored up by long. stable marriages, and each woman has four sons to sustain her.

The wives of the long-term missing or possible POWs, married for only days or months before their men went away, are most susceptible to breakdowns.

Iris Powers says of them with compassion: "They're no Penelopes. Their youth—they're losing About 14 of these women have remarried or are contemplating remarriage soon, "Those others living with men without benefit of legalization-there are a bunch," Mrs. Powers adds.

In one instance, the parents of an Indianapolis man missing in action for years arranged a Mexican divorce for their daughterin-law. They finally came to the conclusion that she was "tied to a specter." But this reaction from parents is rare, perhaps unique.

Mothers-in-Law

Far more common is the growing fiction and estrangement between wives and mothers-in-law. Mrs. Grubb said: "Each one of us feels she is suffering in a special way. The mother thinks. How can his wife know how I feel? She can get married again but I can't have The wives, in turn, feel that marriage is the ultimate physical Since be was reported missing, the mother "won't even talk about her son," the wife said. "I don't know if she thinks he's dead or alive. When we're together, I desperately try not to mention his name. I never say any more, Remember when be used to ...?'

She added, "I'd like to hope he won't find ont how far we've drifted apart." Chances of platonic dating-or dating of any kind-are scarce.

It is difficult, says Mrs. Flora, now 35, because "everybody in my age bracket is attached." Once several couples took her to a dance, and "I was miserable." she said. "All the husbands felt obligated to dance with me while the wives felt resentful." Saying that they feel like "odd-balls" or "fifth wheels," many wives of POWs cluster together for enter-

But more often than not, there are no other POW wives in the area for companionship. Janis Dodge and many more, "the worst time of day" is toward evening, when she sees the husbands in the neighborhood

The children are also deeply affected by the never-never land they live in. The younger children were infants or still unborn when their fathers went away. They may alternately demand that the mothers produce the missing men -"Where is my daddy? If my daddy loved me, he'd be here"or they resent the thought of their father's homecoming as an intrusion,

In one phase, Dwayne Flora who is now 6 years old, used to kiss his father's picture constantly and urge visitors to do the same. Later, he came home from school to ask: "Will my daddy beat me? If that's the way it is, I don't want my daddy back. I like it the way it is just the three of

And there are legal and money problems. Even women whose husbands gave them unlimited powers-of-attorney before they went overseas struggle to get credit or to buy houses or cars. Some were given powers-of-attorney that have run out.

One wife of a missing man tried for a year to buy a home. An agent told her, "Why don't you go back to your apartment and wait seven years, until your husband is declared deceased?" "If I'd been a man, I would have socked him," she said.

Psychiatrists

In addition, the Pantagon's Operation Egress Recap program is aimed toward a sensitive, personal and extensive after-the-war rehabilitation never before ottempted.

But psychiatrists briefing the wives have warned that the men may be temporarily impotent, and may have periods of depression, bewilderment and with-One POW wife in Tacoma,

Some of the women suffer terrible, recurrent dreams. They can be evoked by a traumatic but necessary ordeal that the Defense Department puts them through. Enemy films showing Ameri-

Show Dignity

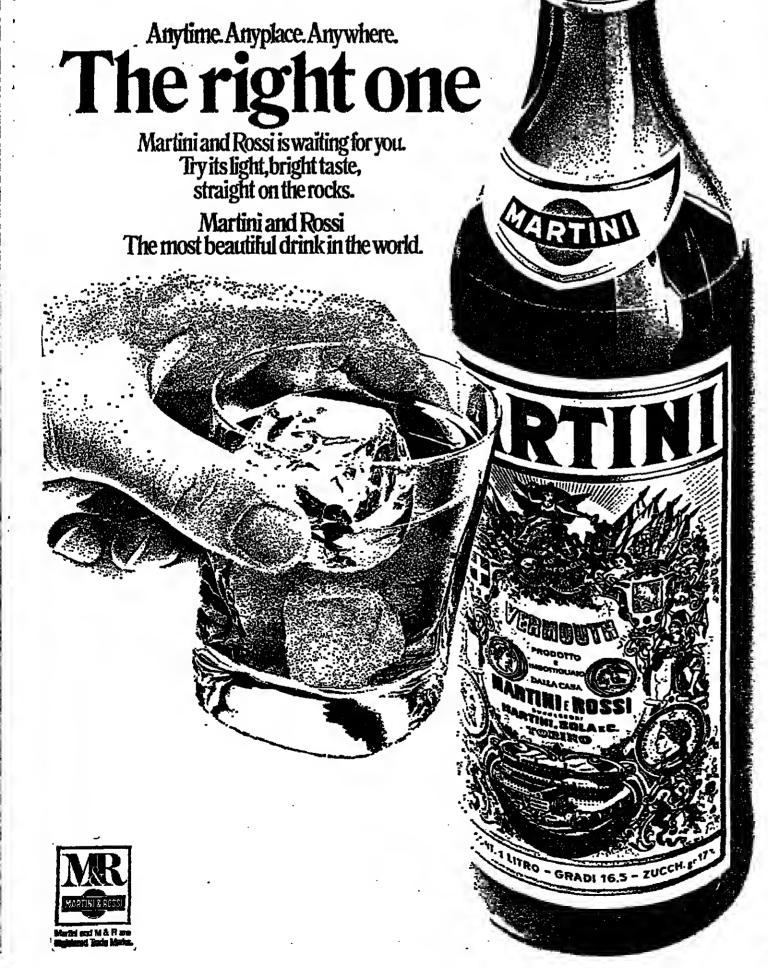

The women have suffered their private purgatories all these years with an almost universal outward show of dignity, strength and loyalty. The last thing they want or need, they say, is pity.

Six weeks have slipped by since Henry A. Kissinger, President Nixon's adviser on national security affairs, announced that "peace is at hand" and that a final agreement on a cease-fire and political arrangement in South Vietnam could be reached in one more negotiating session with the North Vietnamese. But Salgon's refusal to approve the projected accord, and the subsequent haggling over efforts to modify the agreement, have put the families of the POWs through

Such changes represent a radical departure from the tra-ditional concept of the cemetery as a stone-walled fortress separating the living from the dead. The changes are not welcomed by all cemetery operators or plot

Positive Member

Still, in the view of many, including officials of the National Association of Cemeteries, such steps are necessary to make the cemetery an active, positive member of its community.

If these reforms also discourage costly vandalism, improve business and neighborhood relations and ease the pressures of land-hungry developers who criticize cemeteries as "wasted land," then so much the better, these officials say.

"You can't exist in a vacuum any more," a cemetery operator said. "You can't stand in front of your 200 green acres with a flaming sword and say, 'Stay out! This is ours."

In the Chicago area, the changes at the Catholic cemeteries began last February, when rules forbidding bike riding were quietly dropped. New signs proclaimed: "Bicycling permitted under adult supervision.

Bicycling is harmless to the cemeteries and safer there than the streets, said Mr. Philbin. whose 37 metropolitan area cemeteries cover 5,000 acres.

"How can you turn away a eyelist," he asked. "and then let someone in an old clunker with a broken muifler and a furning exhaust?"

Here in Hillside, a tiny suburb 15 miles west of the loop. Queen of Heaven Cemetery not only has permitted bicycling but also has opened its good-sized lake for fishing and has lengthened its summer evening hours. Two other Catholic cemeter-ies have allowed neighborhood youngsters to play football and baseball rgularly on patches of undeveloped land held for fu-ture burlals. And cemetery guards have been instructed to be friendly to the youngsters. Picnicking is not overtly encouraged. Mr. Philbin said, but should a guard see a family spreadin; out a blanket some aunny afternoon, "he would naturally assume it was their plot and leave them alone."

In Arlington Heights, another suburb, cyclists now pedal through Memory Gardens. Some consideration has been given there to formal bike paths and the installation of plenic tables. Other cemeteries permit iceskating on ponds or encourage strollers with pamplilets describing the trees, plants and wildlife found in the cemetery. Queen of Heaven here has found that visitors have increased and vandalism has been reduced since the reforms took effect. Apparently, vandals hesitate to topple tombstones, scribble on walls and steal metal markers in sight of more people. The appeal of opening cemeteries to uses by the living is not universal.

New York City cemetery operators said they had no plans for any such steps. Three years ago, in fact, a planting consultant hired by the city suggested that part ur all of Brocklyn's Holy Cross Cemetery be turned into a park. The borough president, Abe Stork, called the proposal "Insensitive" and "downright ghoulish."

Many agree with him, "A cemetery is a burial ground, not playground," sud a spokesnan for Holy Cross Cemetery in Malden, Mass.

"This is a memorial park," said A.W. Crompton, manager of Woodlawn Cemetery near San Francisco. "It is not an amusement park, People have plenty of places to go for ansusement. Would you want to find somebody with lunch spread out on your mother's grave?'

But there is a more fundamental factor at work: When the EEC is enlarged on Jan. 1, the common commercial policy comes iuto effect. This means that none of the nine Common Market countries will be allowed to negotiate bilateral deals with a Communist country and any existing bilateral pact will have to be terminated within two years.

This puts the Soviet Union in a spot because no new agreements can be discussed except with and through EEC institutions. Common Market officials concede that plenty of East-West trade can continue and even increase without being formalized in trade pacts, but they believe that this is not a situation either side would want to continue for long. The EEC can be expected, thereforc, to seek ways in which the Soviet Union can recognize the Common Market as painlessly as possible and, most important, without losing face.

Wheat, Famine, Foreign Policy

famine long predicted, is beginning to purchase American wheat. Fortunately, this country still has some grain left to sell. But the enormous sales of the past half-year are raising unfamiliar questions for American agricultural policy.

This country has always taken it for granted that its highly productive farms would a ways grow more than anyone needed, and that its grain surpluses were as inexhausticle as the ocean. A generation of agricultural economics has been devoted to the mechanisms for maintaining reasonable prices in the face of constant oversupply. But this year, to our national astonishment, we discover that world demand is straining the limits of our eapacity.

Last summer. in the matter of a few weeks, the Russians bought one-fourth of our annual wheat crop. Then the Chinese, for the first time, bought wheat from us. Japan is a large and steady customer. India is coming onto the market. The United States has become the supplier of last resort for the rest of the world in a year when, through a series of unrelated coincidences, crops have been far short of normal throughout most of the world. The withered harvests in Russia and India are common knowledge, but it has also been a year of low yields in such major wheat exporting countries as Australia and Argentina. The rice crop has been less than expected in some of the areas that depend on it, forcing them to turn to wheat.

The United States can probably meet this demand, but only by running down its huge stocks. We shall not be able to match this year's exports again next year. The dilemma is a recurrent one for farmers and governments. If crops are good next spring in other parts of the world, from South America to the Ukraine, demand abroad will drop sharply. Surpluses would then pile up in our Midwest, and prices would fall for American farmers, But if the rest of the world has another bad year, the United States will not be able to supply the quantities of grain that it is shipping this year.

Last spring, before the harvest began, this

President Salvador Allende did a clever job government help for a 1971 scheme designed India, now approaching the reality of the country had stocks of almost 900 million bushels of wheat on hand from the previous year. This year's crop was 1,550 million bushels, for a total of about 2,450 million bushels. Out of this total, we shall consume about 800 million bushels at home. Foreign purchases may run as high as 1,200 million bushels. That leaves us a little over 400 million bushels to carry over as reserves for next year, less than half this year's level. In the types of wheat commonly used for bread, we shall be fairly close to the minimum reserves necessary to protect ourselves against the possibility of a bad harvest here. The domestic market is already getting very tight, a point illustrated by the continuous rise in the price of wheat.

Most of next year's wheat crop is already in the ground, and beyond the power of government to affect it greatly. On present indications, it will be about 10 percent larger than this year's crop of about 1,700 million bushels. Setting aside 800 million bushels for domestic use, we would have about 900 million hushels for export. That would be more than enough for a normal year, but far too little for a year like the present one.

Wheat exports are now a significant part of our foreign policy. The massive sales of wheat to Russia supported our policy of detente. But it made wheat more expensive to the Japanese, who are not only more consistent huyers but are our allies as well. Wheat to China helps huild a new relationship, wheat to India helps repair an old one. The real limit on our sales this year will be our shipping capacity-whether we can physically deliver, through overtaxed rail and port facilities, as much as we can sell. But next year we shall have much less to ship. It remains to be seen whether we shall have enough wheat to serve our national purnoses abroad. Traditionally, our grain policy has been largely a matter of trying to dispose of the surpluses that our domestic price supports have created. But rising world demand may soon require us to set our wheat production in terms of the new foreign policy of trade and an alliance against famine.

Malraux believes "Europe may be created in a real sense only by the menace of a non-European threat from outside the Continent, just as the U.S.A. was created by the threat from Britain, external to the American continent." He indicated that such a "threat" need not be military and cited the possibility of Japanese commercial rivalry with Europe as a conceivable example of what be meant.

Party's Importance.

He did not envision such a galvanizing force as coming from the United States. Nor did he imagine a direct menace existed from the Soviet Union, only in part European. He said the U.S.S.R. was developing rapidly. This process seemed about to be secelerated by American aid but Russia was already well advanced in such technological new exploration.

Cooke's Tour of America

By James Reston

ONDON.-It's not quite true, of course, but in the minds of great many British subjects (and even some of the larger predicates), the man who discovered America was not Christopher Columbus or any of those adrenturesome Italians, but an English-born American citizen, Alisiair Cooke of the British Broadcasting Corporation.

You can hardly turn on the television here in London these days without seeing the elegant figure of Cooke in Independence Hall in Philadelphia or the Chicago Stockyard anticipating the 200th anniversary of the Ameriand explaining to the British how they won and lost America and what an absent-minded pity it all Was Only the British would have the nerve to try to squeeze the history of "Civilization" into 13 television shows with the help of Kenneth Clark and then let Cooke attempt the same thing with the long story of America. Yet, like De Tocqueville and Lord Bryce, he has somehow managed to reduce all this diversity identity, and in the view of this prejudiced witness, it is the greatest television contribution to truth since the invention of the "instant replay." Cooke is a golfer who turned to writing in despair. He is a news-paper reporter who sought a ref-uge from bankruptcy in radio and television.

As this remarkable television series on America, now appearing on NBC demonstrates, he has mastered all the arts of journaleven at the height of his success, he is a disappointed man.

For his real ambition was to break 80 or even 90, somewhereideological center, the United anywhere!—but he had a problem. States, where he said "democracy As any Scotsman knows, a sound golf swing should be precisely like the whistle of a Bob-White -short backswing and then a definite and triumphant followthrough. Cooke reversed the process with disastrous results. Nevertheless, he is one of many symbols of the remarkable record of the BBC on its 50th anniversary. It has its faults, like any other powerful national TV netrork, and even on its birthday, Lord Hill, its retiring chairman, had to defend it from its critics.

Some of its detractors, said Lord Hill, were complaining that the BBC was the unrelenting agent of permissiveness, at work from morning to night at the business of corrupting the established values of the nation, mocking the sacred and dignifying the profane. Other critics, Lord Hill said, were condemning the BBC as "the blinkered guardian of the privileges of the establishment"-on the one hand staffed by spokesmen of the governing classes, and on the other trendy leftles, staging loaded discussions of contemporary problems.

Well, Cooke illustrates something special about the BBC, which ought to be mentioned on its birthday. It has a sense history and a sense of humor, It represents a nation of the most brilliant talkers and grumblers in the world, and it lets them talk and grumble.

Consistent Excellence

More important, it arranges to have them talk on the major problems of British life. Except for special programs like Kenneth Clark's "Civilisation" and Cooke's "America," which were both expensive and profitable in the end, it works on a very tight budget, but in the last week it has been keeping befors the British people the questions for decision and the traditions and problems of the na-

This is not a sometime thing like the brilliant occasional hourlong "special reports" of the American networks. In the last few days, British television has been reporting in depth on the coming problems of joining the European Common Market, on the economic success of Japan and what this means to British workers and management, on the controversy over teaching and learning in Britain, the effects of inflation on the old and the sick living on pensions, etc.

These are not one-minute flashes of problems; but long and often inexpensively produced discussions by articulate and wellinformed people about the fundamental social, political and even philosophical questions before the world The BBC is not peddling a line, but giving time for thoughtful citizens to make up their own minds. Meanwhile, beginning in 1950, on the 100th anniversary of the first telegraphic cable across the Straits of Dover, the BBC started television communication within Europe. Since then, very gradually, beginning with coronations and championship soccer matches and moonshots, the BBC has gradually established an exchange of programs with the other European nations with two news shows a day and is increasingly expanding discussion and debate on problems from Moscow to Dublin.

This was no calculated arrangement between governments, but at first merely a practical exchange of videotaped news between professional journalists which gradually won the sequiescence of the

It will not create a new League of Nations, but you have to begin with common information before you can get a Common Market, and create a league of minds be-fore you can get a League of Nations. In such ways, almost accidental ways, creative minds establish new understanding of problems at home and common discussion of common problems across borders. Reply to Madrid

The remarks from Madrid of Joseph Puente (Letters, Dec. 5) demand a response. His strenums objections to Helen Drusine's fine article, "A Union Man in Franco's Spain" (IHT, Nov. 13), are misleading. As he points out, the cost of living is less expensive in Spain than elsewhere. But this is relative. One might suggest that he consider the effects of inflation (yes, even in Spain) on the income of a Spanish worker.

He speaks of the "overwhelming support of the Spanish people" for what he calls the government's decision to put an end to "anarchy" in the universities. In disbelief, I ask how he has discerned this support? From free elections? A national referendum? Is he unaware that political freedom and parties do not exist in totalitarian Spain?

As for his remarks concerning those who are oppressed in Spain - "the anarchists, the bomb throwers, the drug peddlers, and the perverts"—one can make a fair reply to so spurious a couclusion by recalling the words of Albert Camus, whose eloquent by arresting persons guilty of or answer to a critic (in 1948) illuminates the issue of oppression which Mr. Puente chooses to ignore: "You are not wellinformed . . . You did everything you could to be III-informed by developing the art of forgetting. You have forgotten that in 1936 a rebellious general, in the name of Christ, arised up an army of Moors, hurled them against the legally constituted government of the Spanish Republic, won victory for an unjust cause after massacres that can never be expiated, and initiated a frightful repression that has lasted ten years [amend this to 33 years] and is not yet over. Yes, indeed, wby Spain? Because you, like so many others, do not remember." WALLACE R. MEISSNER.

This article states that the civil libertarians feel that the authorities are not "playing fair" ties lawyers contend federal agents appear to have searched passengers under the "pretext" of looking for weapons when they actually suspected that the passengers carried drugs or other contraband. Melvin L. Wulf, of the Civil Liberties Union, is quoted as saying: "If such searches unearth evidence of crimes unrelated to hijacking, the evidence should not be admissible in court because agents at the time did not have reasonable cause to believe another type of crime had been committed." How absurd! As a parallel to this line of thinking then, if a police officer saw a car weaving all over the road, stopped the car and noticed a body in the back seat, he must ignore this as he did not have reasonable cause to believe another type of crime had been committed." I can't believe these people take themselves seriously in this respect, and if so, they should change their label from "liberal-minded" to "simple-

tough going on the Teledyne issue

The ECSC issue, technically not a Eurobond because only German banks are syndicating it, was interesting only on the international market among investors who are barred from purchasing the much-higher-yielding German domestic bonds. Against this competition, Teledyne was raised to 7 1/4 percent amid much comment that the DM international rates will have to go still higher. Although Nove Scotia is in the market for 100 million DM with an anticipated coupon of 7 percent, some observers think this will need to be hiked. With the rate structure now in motion, some bankers insist that dollar rates must move up. While the previous differential between the two rates may have been too large, they contend that a quarter-point spread is not sufficient to take into account the Btill significant balance-of-payments deficit that America is running.

Meanwhile, short-term Eurodollar rates have moved up, causing some concern that dealers -who finance their positions with short-term funds-may be forced to dump their inventory. On the other hand, as it is normal for companies to borrow heavily in the short-term market to cover year-end bookkeeping needs it is possible that the rise is a temporary phenomenon.

Another uncertainty is the out-look for U.S. rates. A big federal budget deficit and an expected increase in businesses' spending on capital equipment is widely forecast to force the cost of borrowing in the United States higher; and Eurobond rates have traditionally followed the pattern set in New

By John M. Lee NEW YORK, Dec. 10 (NYT).— One of our leading Wall Street firms entertained a group of middle-management Russians last week and the conversation at one table turned to bridges and how to build them. With a fine sense of self-mockery, the Russians recounted tales of bureaucratic bungling, lost plans and endless committees and then inquired carnestly: "Tell us, how do you build and finance your bridges?" In the field of Soviet-American economic relations, things have moved so far so fast in such a short time that it's easy to forget that up until a year ago, no U.S. secretary of commerce had visited

It was in November, 1971, that Maurice H. Stans responded to a Russian invitation in the buildup for President Nixon's successful summit visit last May. Mr. Stans was followed on the Kremlin circuit by his successor, Peter G. Paterson, and Mr. Peterson presumably will be followed by his successor, Frederick B. Dent. The Russians have reciprocated with visits here, and East European members of the Communist economic bloc have not been far behind.

The deals and developments have come tumbling out with almost unseemly haste—Armand Hammer, buge grain sales, Pepsi-Cola, Chase Manhattan Bank, minerals and machinery, a merry visit by the chairman of the New York Stock Exchange and, to crown it all, a colossal multibillion-dollar negotiation to develop Russian gas with U.S. capital, pipe it across Siberia, liquefy it, ship it here, regasify it and burn it in American homes and factories at goodness-knows-what cost to the American consumer.

.Washington's officialdom is moving, too. The first trade information office in Eastern Europe was recently opened in Warsaw and a similar office is expected in Moscow next year. Commercial offices have been expanded in Moscow, Budapest, oway. The Cart and the Horse

The enthusiasts proclaim that economics has become the leading factor in resolving international tensions. But isn't it really the other way around? Trade is surely but the ratification of political decisions based on a confluence of U.S.-Soviet interests on Victnam, China. Berlin, SALT and European security.

And, for all the talk and movement, East-West trade dozsn't really amount to very much in dollar terms.

A year ago Mr. Stana talked grandly about $5 billion in twoway trade by 1975. But the most recent Commerce Department estimate is that two-way tradethat is, both our exports to and our imports from Eastern Europe, the Soviet Union and China-will be only $1.3 billion in 1973, excluding one-shot grain deals.

This is all fine, of course, and It is double last year's figure, but it is still only 1.2 percent of our trade, or about the same proportion as our trade with Switzerlond or Spain.

Eurobonds

Meanwhile, there is a heavy calendar of new issues. Among the latest offerings are $30 million for Cie. des Bauxites de Guinée, expected with a coupon of 8 percent. The 18-year loan is guaranteed by the companies making up this mining consortium and reads like a who'n who of the aluminum industry-Alcan Aluminium, Alcoa, Martin-Marietta, Pechiney Ugine Kuhlmann, Vereinigte Aluminium-Werke and Montedison.

Trans Austria Gasline Finance Co. is raising $30 million in a 15-year loan that is expected to vield 7.65 percent on the basis of a semi-annual coupon. The loan is secured by SNAM of Italy and OMV of Austria, both statecontrolled firms, who undertake Italy through the pipeline and make transit payments and ad-vance payments to enable TAG to service the debt. Only $20 million of the issue will reach the public as $10 million has already been privately placed (not in Japan).

Rafineria de Petroleos del Norta (Petronor) of Spain is seeking $15 million through a 15year issue expected with a coupon of 7 3/4 percent. Gulf Oil and two leading Spanish banks are guaranteeing 'e issue.

The Danish Mortgage Bank is planning to raise $25 million through an 18-year loan with a coupon of 7 1/2 percent and Sooth Africa is seeking $25 million in a 15-year loan with a 7 3/4 percent coupon. Economics Laboratory is offering through a wbolly-owned subsidiary $15 million in convertible bonds, expected with a coupon of 4 3/4 percent. Tha bonds will be convertible into common stock-traded over-thecounter in New York—at a price about 13 percent over the prevailing New York figure. Managers say the company (which makes specialty cleansing agents) has a big institutional following and the fact that a previous convertible is trading at about $1,650 for each $1,000 face-valued bond has made it many friends. However, one banker, obviously not involved in marketing the issue, remark-ed that the 40 to 50 price-earnings ratio on the stock makes him hesitant.

Still on offer are the $20 million, 8 1/4 percent issue for the Public Power Corp. of Greece; $15 million for Town & City, which wil be priced to yield not less than 7 3/4 percent and $35 million for Brazil, which will be priced to yield around 8 1/2 percent. Grand Metropolitan's $25 mil-ion, 15-year bonds were priced at 98 1/2 last week with a coupon of 7 1/2 percent. Gould's $25 milcent coupon and a conversion premium of 11.9 percent.

A private placement has been arranged for ITT Sheraton through a 10-year issue of 20 million French francs at 7 1/2 percent. The bonds were priced at 99.

Reference last week to the vields on certain Eurobonds apparently sent a number of readers to their old math and then their new math books trying to figure how a bond with a 7 percent coupon and priced at a discount could possibly yield less than 7 percent. Here is how it works. Interest payments in the United States, Britain and until cecently regularly in the Eurobond market ace made twice a year. On the Continent, and increasingly on Eurobonds, payments are made but once a year. Now all bankers are agreed that if interest of, say, $100 a year is paid in June and December as opposed to only in December, the investor who got $50 in June is a little ahead of the chap who had to wait for everything in December.

In addition, all bankers agreed on how much of a dif-ference the semi-annual versus payment is for coupon — nine basis points at 6 percent, 12 basis points at percent, 15 basis points at percent. Where the experts part com pany is in deciding whether the tracted from the coupon to get the yield.

For example, an American banker would say a 7 percent bond priced at par yields 7 per-cent when the interest is paid twice a year. To him, investors would forfeit 12 basis points when interest is paid only once and the yield would drop to 6.88 per-

On the other hand, a German banker would say that a 7 per-cent bond priced at par yields 7 percent when the interest is pair once a year. To him, getting the interest in two installments would be worth a premium of 12 basis points, putting the yield to 7.12 percent.

The yields cited in this space last week were reduced due to the fact that the bonds cited were paying interest but once a

In the secondary market, transactions handled by Euroclear in the week ended Dec. 8 rose to $288.9 million from the previous week's total of $308.1 million. CEDEL reported transactions worth $215,58 million, compared with $234 million a week previous.

disciplined and put up for transfer by Manchester United, has been offered £500 a week as a disc jockey. The bid came from British television personality Jimmy Savile, who said he was prepared to pay Best a bonus of 130,000 for signing as well as the weekly salary. Eddie McAshan of Georgia Tech, the star quarterback, who was suspended Dec. 1 on the eve of the game agains. Georgia. will not play against Iowa State in the Liberty Bowl at Memphi2 on Dec. 18, coach Billy Fulcher announced. Without McAshan, the Engineers lost to Georgia, 27-7. The senior quarterback, who had become the first black man at that position for a major Southeast team three seasons ego, was suspended because he missed two practice sessions for what he had termed "scrious personal problems." determined that the 'personal problems' he sald were responsible for his actions were not, as he explained them to me, suffi-eient to warrant his decision to miss the practices," Fulcher said. "It is my earnest hope that he will get his degree. I personally feel that Eddie has an excellent chance to play professional foot-ball and this incident should not lessen that opportunity." The Southern Conference gave its endorsement to the National Collegiate Athletic Association's withdrawal from the United States Olympic Committee, but decided to retain its own membership in the USOC. Faculty chairmen of the eight-member conference at Williamsburg, Va., passed a resolution at the close of their three-day winter meeting supporting NCAA efforts "to bring about a desirable ccocganization" of the USOC. A spokesman said the league declined to follow the lead of the Big Ten, which last Wednesday became the first conference to withdraw from Olympic committee membersblp. because it believed "we could do more good by staying in." United States District Court Judge W. Acthuc Garrity jr. granted a summary judgment favor of the National Football League and commissioner Pets Rozells in a class-action sult involving ticket sales to profes-sional football games. The suit filed in Boston, similar to 22 others against eight professional sports teams, was brought by Leo T. Pfleffer, naming the New England Petriots as well as the NFL and Rozelle. Pilefter asked triple damages totaling $15 million from the ":ree parties. The Patrlots won a summary jurigment in their case from Judge Garrity Nov. 6. In the sult. sponding to two clubs as a strong artificial opening bid is to make a natural bid in a long suit if the hand is worth a positive response. A second plan, more popular in Europe than in the United States, is to bio a suit in which an ace is held. The modern idea, favored by many young experts, is to show controls. counting a king as a half and an ace as one.

This accounts for North's response of two hearts on the diagramed deal. He showed an acc or two kings, and it was easy for South to judge that his partner held the spade are and that the chib king was missing.

The next three hids in the minor suits were natural, and North then cue-bid his spade ace. As diamonds had been established as the trump suit, the jump to six clubs showed a singleton and suggested a grand slam. As North could contribute no additional values in the major suits, he signed off in six dia-

POWER AND INNOCENCE A Search for the Sources of Violence By Rollo May. W.W. Norton & Co. 283 pp. 87.95.

Reviewed by Paul A. Robinson IN this, his minth book, his first insists May, and they are not since the highly popular "Love and Will," Rollo May has written an apology for power and a critique of innocence. By power he means primarily psychological power: the shillty to asset oneself, to exercise influence, even to enlarge one's anthority at the expense of others. By innocence he understands a failure to acknowledge the reality of power. Just as the reasonable assertion of power. leads to self-fulfillment, so the indulgence of innocence leads to victimization or, paradoxically, to violence. In the case of Melville's Billy Budd-a central symbol for May-innocence encompasses both of these fates: Billy's childlike unwillingness to recognize the presence of evil in the world results in an outburst of murderous violence and eventually in his own death.

May flustrates his thesis with cases drawn from his psychiatric practice. There is, for example, Mercedes, a young black woman, sexually exploited by her parents. whose rage at her own impotence is directed inward, in classic Freudian fashion, to destroy the children she bears. Before com-ing for psychiatric treatment she had suffered eight miscarriages or abortions. When May succeeded in eliciting an aggressive reaction against her parents (whom she imagined opposing her pregnancy because it would withdraw her from circulation), the managed finally to carry a child to term. Most persons seeking psychiatric help, May contends, resemble Mercedes: They exhibit not too much but rather too little hos-

May's therapeutic accomplishments would seem to justify his emphasis on the role of power in psychic development. Behind him stands the authority of Alfred Adler, Rarry Stack Sullivan and a generation of ego psychologists, including Erik Erikson. All of these theorists have disputed Freud's contention that human psychology can be reduced to a struggle between love and hate. Instead they have stressed the need for mastery, the effort to cope with the environment and to make something of oneself.

May is not catisfied to remain a psychotherapist. He aspires to be a social critic as well, and much of this book, accordingly, is devoted to the role of power and violence in recent American history. When applied to domestic politics, his psychological categories often yield persuasive results. He argues, for instance, that the violence committed by blacks in the last decade was the inevitable and, to a degree, legitimate response to their impotence in American society. Hardly an original observation, one might counter, but nonetheless a valid one. He also launches a telling critique of countercultural inas Charle whose inability to deal with the realities of power leads them to conclude that there are no enemies. There are indeed enemies, about to roll over and play dead simply because of the emergence of Consciousness III When he turns to foreign at-fairs, May's dialectic of rower and impocence becomes somewhat confused. An exact construing of his psychological model accus to render a foreign policy distres-ingly similar to Richard Nixou's: failure to exercise national pumer invites aggression and, in the long run, increased violence, According to this reasoning surrender to the Communists in Vietnam would only whet their appetite, heighten our own sense of frustration and lead eventual-ly to World War III. Much as May fancies himself a political realist, he nevertheless avoids such a formulation, Instead he argues that American aggression in Southeast Asia reflects our false sense of innocence. Because Americans can't accept the fact of their own power, because they think of power only in negative terms, they are all the more prone to its ruthless and immoral exercise. The Vietnamese are merely the latest victims of this fatal innocence; the American Indians were the first. The psychodynamics of May's argument remain obscure and, to me, unconvincing. Is it not equally plausible that American aggression reflects not the neglect but precisely the cultivation of power in the American charac-

"Power and Innocence" is writ-ten in the tradition of popular psychology. It makes no pretense to theoretical or empirical rigor. and it draws on an eclectic variety of sources, including the movies, popular literature, myth-ology, individual case histories and a handful of technical studies in sociology and psychology Facile distinctions abound, His natural manner is discursive, not

The book is also marred by its bloated philosophical language We are not much enlightened when we read that the five phases of power are "ontologica ones—that is, they are part of the human being as human." Mos teachers and students will also be surprised to learn that a good lecture is one that communicate. "being" from one person to another. Such ponderousnes might be tolerated in a Tillich o a Sartre, but in these relativel humble surroundings it seem merely gratuitous.

Rollo May is obviously a mai of good will, and at the same tim a man anxious to avoid scati mentality and wishful thinking There are many things to admir in his book, not least amon them his defense of reasoned discourse. Ultimately, however, h leaves one disappointed. H has not mustered the intellectua discipline necessary for his am bitlous subject.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 10 (NYT). -With less than a minute to play, it seemed that the Bengals might be on their way to a comefrom-behind victory over the Cleveland Browns, But though Cincinnati held possession on Cleveland's 7-yard line on first down, its attack floundered. An interception stopped the drive and gave a 27-24 victory to Cleveland. The triumph eliminated Clncinnati from contention as a wild-card candidate in the American Conference and kept Cleveland in the running along with the New York Jets for the open play-Billy Andrews, a Cleveland linebacker, nailed down the triumph.

Stationed at the goal line, he reached up for the interception with only 26 seconds left to play. Virgil Carter, harassed by the defending browns, made the toss that was intended for Chip Myers. kett's 31-yard pass to Rucker with 2:12 left in the half climaxed an 88-yard drive. Less then a minute later, he connected with Rucker again after tackle Rick Cash had recovered an Archie Manning fumble at the Saint 25.

Miami used Paul Warfield's pass catching, an opportunistic dofense and three field goals by Garo Yepremian to score a 23-13 road triumph over New York and move one victory short of the first perfect regular season in the NFL in 30 years.

The victory on the moddy Yankee Stadium turi boosted Miami'a won-lost record to 13-0 for the season and enabled them to become the fifth NFL team to post 13 victories in a regular season. The Dolphins face Baltimore next week in their last regularseason game.

The Giants lost four fumbles, had two passes intercepted and tried a faks field goal which went awry. The Giants also had an extra point blocked.

Bob Griese was activated for the game but Earl Morrall di-rected the Dolphins. Morrall has led the team to eight straight victories since Griese was injured in the fifth game.

The most dazzling Miami play was a 34-yard touchdown pass from Morrall to Warfield with 3 minutes left in the eccond period, Warfield leaped into the air on the 2-yard line to catch the pass and then slid across the goal line in the mud for the touchdown that put the Dolphins shead, 17-6.

Austria's Tritscher Triumphs

By Bernard Kirsch

VAL D'ISERE, France, Dec. 10 (IHT).—On a day of medical wonders, an Austrian who has one leg which is longer than the other won the World Cup downhill here today while an American who was supposed to be in a hospital finished in the top 10. "Hey, you're supposed to play it cool on that knee," a member of the U.S. sking staff said to Eric Poulsen, who finished ninth in the Critérium de la Premiere Neige downhill. Poulser tore ligaments in his right knee and broke a wrist during training in February at Sapporo. Japan, a week before the Winter Olympics. Doctors told him it would take about a year for the ligaments Reinhard Tritscher, 26, seemed on his way to the top of the ski world in 1969. Two years earlier, the versatile skier had defeated Jean-Claude Killy in a sialom. But in a sialom at Mont-Saint-Anne. Quebec, Tritscher went sprawling. Doctors operated twice and a rear later, when the cast was removed, his right leg an inch shorter than his left, and now he skis with padding in his right shoe. Tritscher started his comeback last year. He had a second in a giant slalom and a total of 27 points in World Cup competition, but he dld not score in a downhill the fastest and most dangerous of the three skiing disclplines. His victory today tied him for first in this season's World Cup standings with Itallan Piero Gros, who won the giant slalom here Friday. 45th Starter

The Austrian finished today's 3,298 meters (a little more than two miles) in 2 minutes 11.89 seconds. He had the disadvantage of being the 45th man to start, but kept a steady line, handling the four "big" jumps, one of which sends a skier flying about feet, with precision, Second in 2:12.03 was his teammate David Zwilling, and third was Italian Marcello Varallo, who has had several leg injuries during the past two years and last season was seen sking while wearing a cast on his leg. The Americans placed skiers in the top 10 as Boh Cochran, 21, from Richmond, Vt., came in sixth to tie downhill gold medalist Bernhard Russi of Switzerland. Cochran said he made one mistake in the race, "that I flew too far on one jump," but he landed safely and may be on his way to becoming one of sking's all-around men, of Thinh there are so few.

America's top two downhillers finished 15th and 47th, respectively. Lafferty reportedly had equipment trouble, while Currler is still gaining back the 15 pounds he lost in Army basic training. He is now a private first class, and is on temporary duty here. In yesterday's women's special the Olympic elalom, was fourth. The Americans had five entries yesterday and two of them finished both heats, Susan Patterson, 16, of Sun Vailey, Idaho, clocked 1:33,18 to finish 27th while Cindy Nelson, 17, of Lutsen, Minn., did 1:34.64 in the field of 61 women as only 35 finished both heats.

Gail Blackburn, 17, from Brunswick, Maine, in Europe for the first time, fell at the fifth gate of the first run. Miss Procil, who is seeking her third straight World Cup, flopped on the 52-gate second course when her ski caught a marker. The 19-year-old Austrian is now tied for first in the Women's World Cup standings with Miss Behr, each with 25 points in the end-of-the-year hi! What a year it has been for us at 72 Nestfeather Court! As maoy of you know by this time, Ernestine left us last February after 23 years of marriage. having decided after readiog several books on women'a liberation and taking a special nightschool course in

We get a postcard from her once in awhile and you will be happy to hear, I know, that she seems to be having a ball in her new life, and is traveling a lot and has taken up karate. We to see her under the yule tree this year in her new black

In March, you will be sorry to hear, Chadwick died. He just keeled right over one night at suppertime in the kitchen-we eat off the top of the automatic dishwasher a lot now that Ernestine is gone—and went out as peaceful as you please. The radical vet said it was lack of love that killed Chadwick, and told us it was a crime against pets to keep them oppressed in a family that didn't have enough love to give them.

In April, there was some real action for Dad when he made a trip to New York and got mugged in an elevator. Everybody laughed and chided Dad for heing "a real playboy," because the previous afternoon he had been caught in a police raid on a massage parlor in Times Square. Needless to say, May brought the usual disaster with the car, which was more pleasant than usual this year because young Barney, who was driving when it was totaled, escaped with only 14 stitches and a broken leg. Old Doc Struthers said it was Ernestine's fault for leaving her husband and children and pets the way she had done, and young Barney was getting into these auto accidents hecause of a lack of love in the household, which was leaving him unfulfilled as a male chauvinist piglet. Everything was yummy through most of June, and Dad was con-gratulating himself oo having finally escaped the Curse of Nest-

feather Court, as he facetiously

WASHINGTON—Season's greet- calls it, when on June 29 the ings to all our wonderful sycamores died, the real-estate friends! And for those who don't tax was raised and little Belinda, believe in seasons, a great hig who had felt oppressed ever since being told she would definitely have to take Latin next year in high school, ran off to Mexico with young Carltoo Smearcase from over in Goodgreed Circle.

Fortunately, you will be pleased to hear, little Belinda writes that she has joined a peyote-growing commune, is coming right along in Spanish and has chucked young Smearcase for a former Ivy Leaguer named Crimpout who is into Buddha.

The summer was extremely interesting for all because of a large rattlesnake that got into the vents from the forced-air heating system when a snake-farm operator, on his way from Texas to Boston, parked his car in Nestfeather Court one night and left the trunk unlocked. You will he happy to know that this folly moved Grandpa, who has a deathly fear of reptiles, to pack his trunk and saxophone and move in with Uncle Ted and Aunt

Young Barney and Dad had such a swell time tormenting the old gentleman with stories about how much rattlesnakes loved to crawl into saxophones and hide that they hated to see him go. Young Barney, as you probably know by Dow, has left Nestfeather Court and taken kid brother Petey with him. They are traveling in Europe trying to decide which country to settle down in. As you may remember from last year's Christmas letter, young Barney had warned everybody if President Nixon was re-elected. Petey told Dad if he couldo't go too, he would take the denial as evidence of a lack of love which would make him feel so oppressed and unfulfilled he would probably total the car and redouble the cost of the auto

that he would leave the country

You will be glad to hear that despite the departure of Ernestine, young Barney, kid brother Petey, little Delinda, Grandpa and Chadwick, Dad is not all alone at Nestfeather Court. Just the other night-very late it was -as Dad was opening another bottle of gin, who should slither out of the forced-air vent but a large, unusually genial rattlesnake who likes Scotch. He says his name is The Pecos Kid and he never wants to go back to the snake farm hecause he is oppressed there.

We hope to see you all in the brand New Year!

MARRIAGE UPCOMING: Actress Jame Fonds announced in a press release that allowill wed fellow American peace activist Tom Hayden next year, as soon as her divorce from French film director Reger Vadim is final.

Miss Funds, described as 34 by two wire services and as 35 by one, made the announcement in Rocros, Norway, where she had about a week of work left in the filming of Theen's "A Doll's House."

Hayden, described by two wire services as 28 and by one as 22, was with her at the mountain resort, north of Oslo, He is a former leader of Students for a Democratic Society who was one of five members of the "Chicago Seven" to be convicted in 1969 of crossing state lines to incite rick at the 1968 Demogratic National Convention, He was sentenced to five years' imprisonment but the convictions were reversed last month by a federal appeals court. He and Miss Funds met while on a political campaign trail six months ago.

ANOTHER OPCOMINGS: Ma-nucl Benites—widely known as the flamboyant buildighter "El Cordobes"—was reported in Madrid as planning to marry next spring Martine Fraysco, the Frenchwomen who save birth last month to Beniter's son after hearing the builtighter a daugh-ter four years ago. Early this year, friends said Benites vowed to marry the Frenchwoman if she bore him a son. The buildighter is 36, his girl friend 29.

MARRIAGE COMING APART?: Texas Attorney General Crawford Martin says that the mar-riage of "Billie" Ert. 30, and Antenio Melina, 33, is invalid because: "It is impossible for two men to acquire the status of being married in Texas." He said William Ert signed a female's application for a marriage license by writing "Billie" (a name frequently borne by women in the American South) as a first name. Ert, who appears as a female impersonator in a nightclub act, wore a white miniskirt, blouse, woman's wig and makeup when applying for the license, a county clerk said. Molina, a former high-school football player, has worked as a shipping clerk MARRIAGE RIFTED; In 820 Paulo, Brazil, a man said he had lent his wife to a friend for two months with the provision that he could "fetch her" whenever he missed her. "All three of us agreed, but in the end that scoundrel refused to return my wife," he complained to police. The friend said the wife did not want to return.
